Dare Congress Brave This Deadly Ridicule?

WIDESPREAD RESENTMENT over the action of congressmen in voting pension privileges to themselves has developed into a campaign of pretty hot ridicule. This is extremely unfortunate because of the disparaging influence it may have in the faith for strengthening national unity

The ridicule campaign involves the sending of "bundles for Congress" to Washington in the manner of effigies, the use of grotesque animadversions in entertainment skits, the posting of thousands of twitting postcards and the passage of Even Dr. Francis E. Townsend finds in it an argument for his own pension scheme declaring that his group has as much right to pensions as the congressmen.

Congress needs help!" reads a postcard sent out by the Athletic Roundtable of Spokane, Wash, which is typical of the literature being distributed. "They voted nemselves a pension, but that ain't enough. Mail your old straw hats, rags, mothballs -anything that's light and cheap-to your congressmen and senators today. Mail early and often. Let the Red Cross wait a little. Knit for Congress now. Knit for Bundles for Britain? No! Bundles for Hawaii? No! Bundles for Congress? Yes! Don't worry about the war and taxes. Get that pension-forget the Axis. Save a congressman at any Utilization of the great power of the American sense of humor is something to be desired in these days of war stress, but it is too bad that it must be so employed, that it must carry a bitterness felt in many places beside Spokane.

A good argument may be made out for the pension plan in normal times, inasmuch as it is paid for largely by participating members and at a cost much smaller mission places it at only $80,000. But the when economy is so direly necessitous and the Congress dallies in voting the econ omies it should long since have voted. A pretty bad stench is also left by the passage of the pension bill without a record vote, so you will never know which congressmen thus voted this little dish of gravy to themselves. Even $80,000 a yea is not to be sniffed at in these days of multiple billion spendings, especially in view of the rather generous allowances already made for congressional services Representatives and senators draw $10,000 a year, get travel, clerical and other office expenses and many of them have rich side takings from talking over the air, filling speaking engagements and writing for

Senators Byrd, Bailey, Burton and Johnson have introduced a repealer. In view of developments, as well as of the wartime circumstances, it should be speedily

A Wide Field For Mr. Arnold

SOMETHING BRAND NEW in the federal government structure may result from the assumption of the role of defender of the business man against government agencies by Thurman Arnold, assistant attorney general. He asserts that the Anti-trust division of the department of Justice is taking on a new war-time function, the protection of small businesses and independent dealers from the injustices and inequities of orders issued by such federal groups as the War Production Board and the Office of Price Administration

Mr. Arnold takes the position that independent operators and dealers now need a "friend in Washington" to intercede for them with the new war-time administrative agencies. As he said, "great economic decisions are not being made by the courts any longer, but by improvised agencies which make hurried decisions affecting every small business

Arnold noted that priority and rationing orders and price ceilings have multiplied the ways in which large industries by illegal actions and agreements can driv out of business small dealers. He offered some examples. Some large wholesalers of rubber and camelback, he asserted, have refused to sell materials to small firms retreading tires. Then the large dealers have sent out representatives to buy up the machinery of the firms they had driven out of business, Mr. Arnold added,

Apparently, it is expected that many small businessmen and dealers will send complaints to the division because more employees are being assigned to deal with problems arising from administrative orders. Branch offices to deal with the comaints soon will be opened in several cities. Meanwhile, the division plans to continue its function of protecting small business from "buccaneering" by industrial and trade monopolies.

Mr. Arnold no doubt will find a big field for his newly-assumed activities. Thedesire for large profits is ever present, in time of war as well as in days of tranquility. But after the war there may be a demand by small business that Mr. Arnold continue to protect it against government agencies. There is in this picture the possibility in peacetime of a public defender against alphabetical groups

Farm Requirements That Contradict

A CONTRADICTION in farming requirements is under test, and properly so, in a case just instituted over in Carroll

The farming policy now being pursued by the department of Agriculture, reversing a contrary plan formerly carried out, is that of increasing farm products for the needs of the war program, yet laws still obtain whereby farmers are penalized

A group of Carroll county farmers has filed a petition asking the circuit court to enjoin enforcement of the federal act imposing a forty-nine cent a bushel penalty for wheat grown in excess of allotted acre-

The plaintiffs do not look to war program requirements but contend that the act is unconstitutional because it "attempts to empower the secretary of agriculture to arbitrarily control intrastate wheat acreage and production by allotment."

That differentation as between interan interesting point, particularly since the twilight zone there has lately been widened by court decisions, one of which hit intrastate production on the ground that it provided competition and thereby affected intrastate production. But the main point, of course, is the necessity for composing the contradictory wheat regulations. In view of the policy of abundance as superseding that of enforced scarcity, the penalty does not make sense.

Pennsylvania Solves Its Apportionment Problem

A HAPPY SOLUTION has come in the gressional situation in Pennsylvania wherein for lack of it the state would have obliged to elect all of its thirty-three congressmen at large this fall because aplast census caused a loss of one seat.

A final agreement was reached by nine embers of a special ten-man bi-partisan committee after negotiations lasting many months and Governor Arthur H. James has announced his intention of issuing a call next week for a special session of the legislature to enact it into law.

Under terms of the agreement, Republicans would eliminate one of their northern tler districts and the Democrats would drop one of their districts in Allegheny county, while one congressman would run

The agreement seems fair enough and a situation is averted that would have operated adversely to the representative scheme and resulted in undue political

The Priceless Gift

By MARSHALL MASLIN

If I possess all the treasures and talents of the world and lack imagination, my life is dull

If I have no imagination, ll my experience and all my years are wasted.

Without imagination, my life is a desert. I am rooted in the earth. I cannot stir. Here I stand in this instant of time, on this infertile rock forever and forever to the last day of adventure here.

Axis Propaganda Is Funny Fiction For Americans

The U. S. Army here is wish to snow whereinhell the Japs found an American who addresses troops as:

But probably the best thing Tocyo has even done in a literary way was its announcement that Columbus did not discover America . . The Japs did!

"It is said that Columbus discovered America but it was not discovered for the first time by him His was the first time a European discovered the American continent." An Appealing Proposal

From the Wheeling. W. Va., Intelligencer

Even to the lay mind to which the intricacies of money and currency remain an unfathomable mystery, there is something appealing in the proposal of Secretary Morgenthau that a common unit of currency be created to be used in inter-country trade on the Western Hemisphere. What he had in mind, Mr. Morgenthau said, was a unit common to all countries on this hemisphere somewhat like the old trade dollar, which would be used purely as an export This newspaper does not pre-and our break in diplomatic relatend to know what it would take to establish such a currency or relative contributions by the countries concerned. It is easy to see, however, that it would greatly facilitate the exchange of goods. For that matter, why wouldn't it be practicable to establish one currency for all Western Hemisphere countries to be used for all purposes? And, carrying the thought to its logical conclusion, wouldn't i simplify matters greatly were it practicable to establish a single currency all over the world? For all we know, this may be wholly practicable. But it's an alluring

THE DEACON CUTS HIMSELF IN ON THE COLLECTION

earch is so short the danger to soldier

Weeks ago, this column tried a very short profile but confined itself to a guess from his character and personal knowledge of the ground as to how he would conduct the retreat from Lingayan and the defense of Bataan-a guess of which the very last verse is yet to be written, but which was otherwise 100 percent accurate.

You can't be brought up from boyhood with a man under old West Point conditions and believe he is statements. any myth or not understand him as well as you would your brother.

Historical Examples

More than one battle and at least one campaign (the March through Georgia) was decided by the knowledge by one commander of just what the other would do in a given set of circumstances-knowledge gleaned from the cheek-by-jowl living among a few score cadets at the academy and in service afterward. For example, Sherman (or one of his staff) knew that the way to Savannah was open, because the headlong Hood would surely strike at his communications, and wear himself out against the rock-bound Thomas. No, MacArthur is no Admirable Crichton and, far from being super- doing human, he is as companionable a comrade as a man could wish-affectionate, generous, considerate and kind. He does have certain qualities in the superlative. He was simply born without the emotion of fear. He does not lose his head in making decisions under any excitement. He has far better than a good mental equipment. Passion for Perfection

By itself it is no genius but when you add to it a fourth superlative quality it amounts to the same thing. That fourth quality is a passion for perfection in everything he does. For this he will please you but such victories won't make any sacrifice of time and effort. His was not the best brain confident that we'll get news of that I encountered at West Point, but its product marched with the best because he made it so.

He has one great weakness. has the instinct of a great actor for the limelight. When he gets it he is not unlikley to pose. He deserves it now as richly as any hero in history, but even when he doesn't, he is apt to use words appropriate to that glare and sometimes they could make him look a

That is why we must hurry with all work on the home front.

But surely everyone understands why the news is expected to be bad in the Far East. It is because the Axis strategy of Japan's attack has failed to pull our strong naval forces out of the Atlantic. We're fighting a defensive war in the Pacific, stalling for time until we can get greater strength there without weakening our position else-

Certainly we have strong armed forces today. We have naval strength and air strength and strength on the ground. But no one expects our fighting leaders to tip their hands as to where they are operating or what they are

We feel it is necessary from time to time to caution all civilians to be patient, keep steadily at your own job and be confident that our leaders are not permitting the enemy to make saps out of our armed forces. Of course our navy is busy and our air force is active and, yes, our land army is active, too. Give all our forces a chance to pick their own battleground in their own good time and we'll read some news that will be less gloomy In the meantime, you folks at

British Bachelor Spends Greatest Sum on Clothes

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage-Distributed by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

When is a bachelor not a bachelor? Answer: When he has no partner for the middle aisle and has had "thumbs down" from all the eligible girls of his acquaintance That is, he's a single man not of his

That bachelors in England would gladly become benedicts is made self-evident by the fact that they are the heaviest users of clothes coupons under the British rationing scheme, surpassing even the unmar-

The Board of Trade in London furnishes some authoritative statistics which reveal that at the present time men are far more clothes conscious than women. For the first nineteen weeks under the clothes rationing plan, it was revealed that bachelors used thirty clothes coupons to the unmarried

Men Buy Sensibly

Nevertheless, the men bought sensibly-overcoats, mufflers, gaiters, mittens. The rumor that women borrowed coupons from their men friends was proven utterly misleading and untrue. Equally false was the idea that parents spent their coupons on their children. Apparently moppets went without leggings and mufflers while parents saved their coupons. The young, especially of the male persuasion, marriageable and ful of hope, spent their coupons on per sonal adornment. Girls, of persuadable age, eighteen to thirty, were not far behind. Still, the men were shead of them.

Eleven per cent of the men and six per cent of the women verging on middle age and older spent no coupons at all. These apparently were resigned to the drab made over garments which fly no signal that the wearer is open to convic tion about marriage.

Fine feathers make fine birds, the ancient truism assures us, and we've all seen that "In the spring a livedove." We have the old reliable poet Tennyson's assurance for the connection between the impulse to love and a general sprucing up of

No "Blitz Suit" for First Lady

News as to the dispensing of clothes coupons in England made us pause and reflect on the thought that British bachelors outdo women in the buying of clothes. Wars may decimate populations but love and marriage fill in the breach as the above grim statistics in the rationing of clothes coupons conclusively

Returning from Mrs. Roosevelt' last press conference we-the old guard who have covered her conferences from the beginning-were amazed to hear her say that she wouldn't have a blitz suit" such as Winston Churchill dons in expectadent would have one, even if there would be difficulty in finding the necessary zippers.

Likes the Outdoor Girl

Dear Miss Fairfax: I'm a young man of 26, not bad looking, and am popular in my neighborhood. I enjoy hiking and all sports which keep me in the open. I've met many girls, but it seems all they want is a man who can spend a lot of money on them. I don't care for that type of girl, but I haven't given up hope that some day I'll meet the outdoor sports type-a girl who wouldn't be afraid of getting her shoes dusty hiking on the open road or along the sandy beach.

Can you give me any suggestions as to how I can meet that type of girl?

In your city there's an excellent hiking club which numbers both men and women among its membership. I suggest you look into that organization. If you go on their jaunts, you'll probably meet some girls of the type you like.

You might also join the Y.M.C.A. where you'll meet boys interested It often puzzles me, when I get in sports. They will be able to help

Her Counsin's Husband

Dear Miss Fairfax: I'm 22 years of age, and recently lost the job I had. My cousin very kindly invited me to come and stay with them so that I could have a short rest before taking my next position, which is assured me in the near future. Their home is very lovely, even Juxurious, and I should be quite happy if it weren't for my cousin-in-law. Every time we are left alone, he persists in making love to me, even saying that he would be glad to divorce my cousin if I would promise to marry him I've really grown to hate him and his contemptible ways. A friend of mine, who understands how things are, would
